

Ron Rue Exhibit Dedication, by Various, 6 August 2008

Ron Rue was a celebrated carver in Dorchester County and the entire Eastern United States. He lived close to the Dorchester County Historical Society, and encouraged the establishment of a Carvers Museum at the Society. At his death, his family donated his entire workshop to the Society, and it is now a main attraction in their new Robbins Heritage Center, across the street from where Ron had lived and carved. This recording is of the dedication ceremony when his shop was moved to the Historical Society and opened to the public.
