

A New Generation Following Old Ways (Decoy Carving), David Robbins, 7 March 2007

David describes current usage of the old traditions in decoy carving on the Eastern Shore with emphasis on the long time traditions of Dorchester County.

David Robbins is an award winning wildfowl carver located on the Eastern Shore of Maryland. His father is well known in Dorchester County for his hunting and trapping, as well as boat building and decoy making abilities. During family visits to relatives in South Dorchester, he developed a deep appreciation for the marshes and wildlife found there.
